Increase your visibility with a wide variety of exhibits and sponsorship opportunities.

About the Society

We are delighted to invite you to participate as an exhibitor and sponsor at the SRCD Anti-Racist Developmental Science Summit: Transforming Research, Practices, and Policies. As one of the leading international societies in the field of child development, the SRCD Summit provides an exceptional platform for researchers, practitioners, and policymakers to exchange knowledge, discuss emerging trends, and showcase cutting-edge advancements in the field.

About the Summit

The Society for Research in Child Development (SRCD) is proud to present the "SRCD Summit on Antiracist Developmental Science: Transforming Policies and Practices." This inaugural summit aims to bring together developmental scientists to address critical issues related to racial equity and justice in developmental science.

The #srcdsummit24 will feature interactive sessions to encourage participant collaboration and engagement. These sessions will provide opportunities for attendees to discuss challenges, share best practices, and develop actionable strategies to implement into their respective research studies and organizations.

Throughout the Summit, attendees will have ample opportunities to network and build connections with fellow researchers, policymakers, and practitioners equally committed to advancing antiracist developmental science.

Join us at the SRCD Anti-Racist Developmental Science Summit: Transforming Research, Practices, and Policies as we collectively work towards creating a more equitable and just future for all children, regardless of their background or identity. Together, we can make a meaningful impact and shape the future of developmental science to be truly antiracist and inclusive.

Summit Program Organizers

Dr. Velma McBride Murry holds the Lois Autrey Betts Endowed Chair, Associate Provost, Office of Research and Innovation, and University Distinguished professor in the Departments of Health Policy at Vanderbilt School of Medicine and Human and Organizational Development at Peabody College in Nashville, Tennessee. Her research focuses on examining the significance of context to everyday life experiences of African American families and youth with specific consideration to processes through which racism and other social structural stressors, cascade through families to influence parenting and family functioning, quality of life, and developmental outcomes and adjustment among youth, including mental and physical health. McBride Murry is Associate Director of the Vanderbilt Institute for Clinical and Translational Research, Community Engagement Research Core, Vanderbilt University Medical Center, Past President of the Society for Research on Adolescence, and the President of the International Consortium of Developmental Science Societies. She was a former member of the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine's Board on Children, Youth, and Families and currently serves on numerous other boards and governing councils, including the National Academy of Medicine's Culture of Health; Board of Directors Chair, Foundation for Child Development; and Society for Research in Child Development. McBride Murry is one of the 100 elected members to the 2020 National Academy of Medicine Class and recently appointed by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to serve a four-year term at the National Institutes of Health Advisory Mental Health Research Council. She earned her Ph.D. in Human Development and Family Studies from the University of Missouri–Columbia.

Dr. Emilie Smith is a Professor of Human Development and Family Studies, the Inaugural College of Social Science Distinguished Senior Scholar, and Lead of MSU Youth Equity Project, the Interdisciplinary Thematic Area on Reducing Disparities, Increasing Opportunities for Marginalized Youth at Michigan State University. Her community-engaged research seeks to understand the ways in which families, schools, and communities interact to affect positive youth development, particularly racial-ethnic identity, and socialization among those of diverse socio-economic and geographic backgrounds. Her work involves rigorous, randomized trials and multilevel methods to examine family and community approaches that reduce disparities and increase equity, drawing upon interdisciplinary partnerships. Smith is a Fellow of Division 27 (Community) of the American Psychological Association. She has served as an Associate Editor of the American Journal of Community Psychology, on the editorial board of the Journal of Adolescent Research, and as a consulting editor for numerous other journals. She has served on the elected Executive Board of the Society for Prevention Research and currently serves on the elected Governing Council of the Society for Research on Child Development. Smith is formerly the Janette McGarity Barber Professor and Department Head of Human Development and Family Science at the University of Georgia. Her work at the local and national levels has demonstrated effective approaches to often engaging lower-income ethnic minority families in prevention research using group-based family and community, culturally informed approaches. This is epitomized in her co-edited book volume, Preventing Youth Violence in a Multicultural Society, and her co-edited Special Section of the top developmental journal, Child Development, on Positive Youth Development in Diverse and Global Contexts. Her work on racial-ethnic identity and socialization among marginalized youth and social justice approaches to positive youth development is highly cited in the field. Smith has received over 20 million dollars in national and foundation funding for her research on promoting positive child and family development, along with numerous local and national awards.
